Voice of (Optimistic) Dissent Another point of view comes from John Bollinger, president of BollingerBands.com in Manhattan Beach, Calif., who believes the October lows represented a "good retest" of the July lows, and that we're in a new cycle today. On Oct. 1, Marchand de fournitures éloniennes. A quick glance at a chart of the S&P 500 shows a pretty clear "W"-formation, a common pattern at market lows, with the July and October lows marking the bottom points. The average now appears destined to revisit, if not break, those levels.Watching the Fall, Not the News From a purer technical read, Dickson suggested any rally at the outbreak of hostilities will be relatively meaningless in comparison to the technical nature of the decline that precedes it. Today, "we're working a different part of the puzzle," he said. In fact, Besignor suggested the market would probably be falling more heavily now if you didn't have the October and July lows as a "reference point" where buying is expected to emerge. The basic principle is that major market bottoms occur when there's a series of sessions with 90% of both trading volume and price activity to the downside. But from a technical point of view, any subsequent rally after a test or breach of October lows will be, well, mainly technical in nature. Tableau de primes de l'Oasis de cristal. Moreover, geopolitics may be secondary to overriding technical developments. 9, the Dow closed at 7286.27 and the S&P 500 near 777. When that's soon followed by a 90% upside day, it's an indication the selling pressure has been satiated and buyers can take control. Maybe a rally is coming — one trader even suggested results from Dell (DELL) - Get Dell Technologies Inc Class C Report after the close Thursday could be a trigger — but there's very little that's "typical" about the current environment. Aaron L. And a Triple?The combination of the July and October lows created a clear 'W' formation in the S&P 500's chart. "But if we see a steady erosion of buying interest without capitulation, war or no war, we wouldn't anticipate any significant rally." As previously discussed, Lowry's president, Paul Desmond, has been lauded for his research on so-called 90% downside days. Instead, Besignor estimates that most buying was done between S&P 880 and 920, meaning most positions are now underwater. Marchand d'armures culturelles. Hard-core bears argue the "war fears" talk is a smoke screen, claiming the economy and stocks are suffering because of deep fundamental problems such as equity valuations, high consumer debt levels, mistrust of corporations and Wall Street, rising federal deficits, a weakening dollar, the unwinding of the 1990s bubble and (for good measure) rock 'n' roll. "Because we went up so quickly off the initial stages of the October lows, there's nothing between the October lows and current levels that could conceivably serve as areas of significant buying interest," said Richard Dickson, senior strategist at Lowry's Reports. Some chart readers believe the current decline is mainly a function of the ongoing bear market and the V-shaped nature of the rally from the October lows.
